Allianz Thematica

The Fund allows investors to participate in the opportunities arising from structural shifts, without being constrained by sectors, regions, market cap size or any benchmark. These shifts are usually triggered by innovation or regulation, a narrowing supply-demand situation or socio-economic factors.

Consumers and businesses are influenced by megatrends

- We live in a world where investment opportunities are being recast by demographic changes, environmental concerns and technology-driven disruptions. These global changes can create opportunities for investment.
- We can see certain megatrends that are producing major long-term shifts: innovation, demographic change, resource scarcity and urbanisation.

Four megatrends

Urbanisation

More people are crowding into cities. Housing is scarce, adequate supply of public services and waste disposal must be ensured, while innovations enable more efficient operations.

Technological Innovation

Automation on the production side, use of online services on the demand side.

Resource Scarcity

Many raw materials are finite or limited in their availability. Alternatives are being developed to ensure supply.

Demographic & Social Change

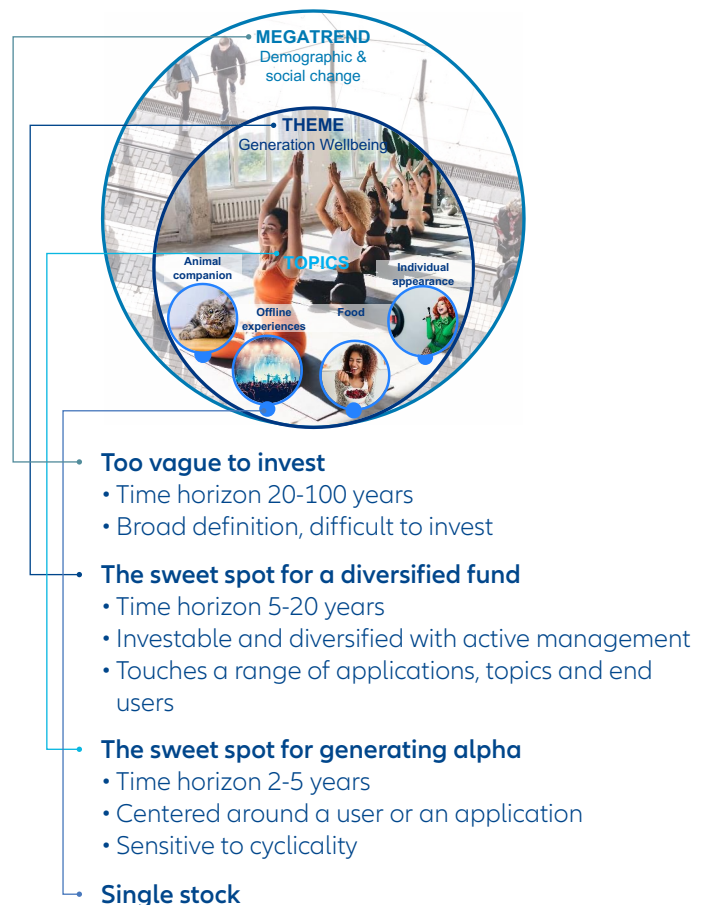

Different demographic factors depending on the region – aging in the West, young emerging middle class in the East and in Africa.

Thematic investing is gaining popularity

- Investment decisions are being impacted by long-term megatrends, which transcend into individual themes.
- Thematic investing allows investors to participate in exciting growth areas of the world's economy. Companies that enable and benefit from these themes will likely see higher earnings growth and gain market share.
- Themes offer intuitive investment propositions, each based on an underlying structural growth scenario that investors can subscribe to in alignment with their personal convictions.
